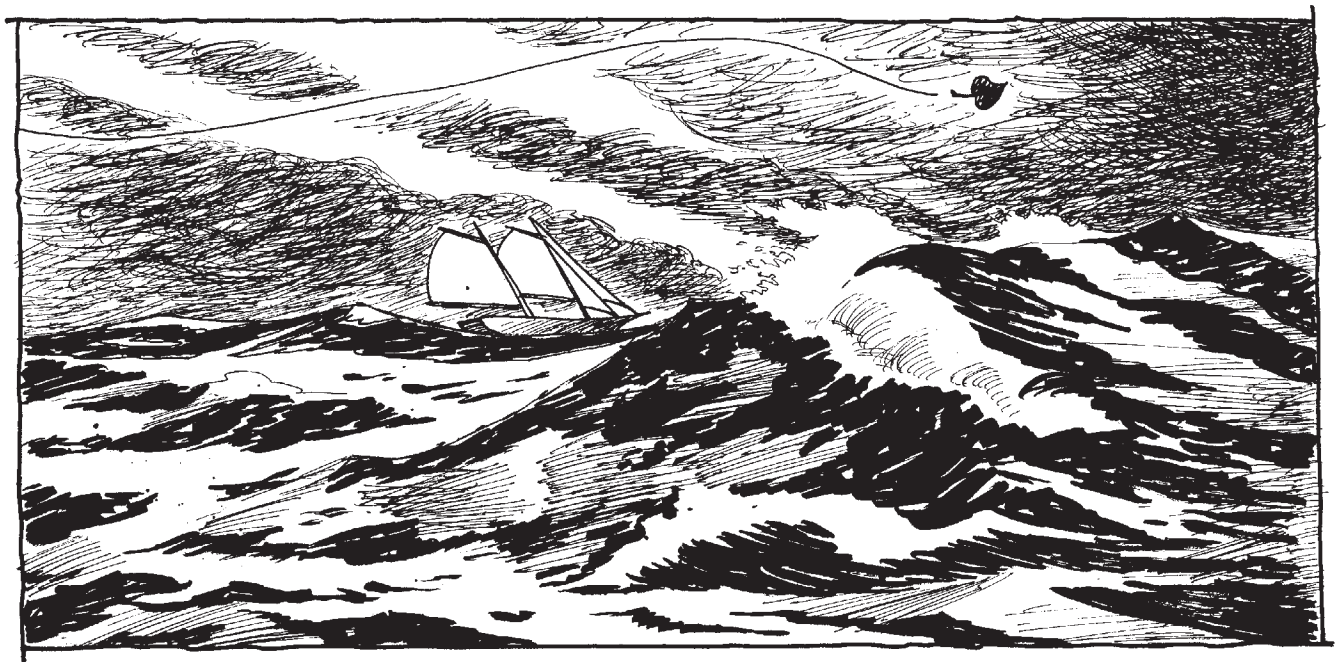
The still air stirs and begins to blow.
It swirls and whirls both to and fro.

It blows through the woods and through the trees.
It blows quite hard when elephants sneeze.

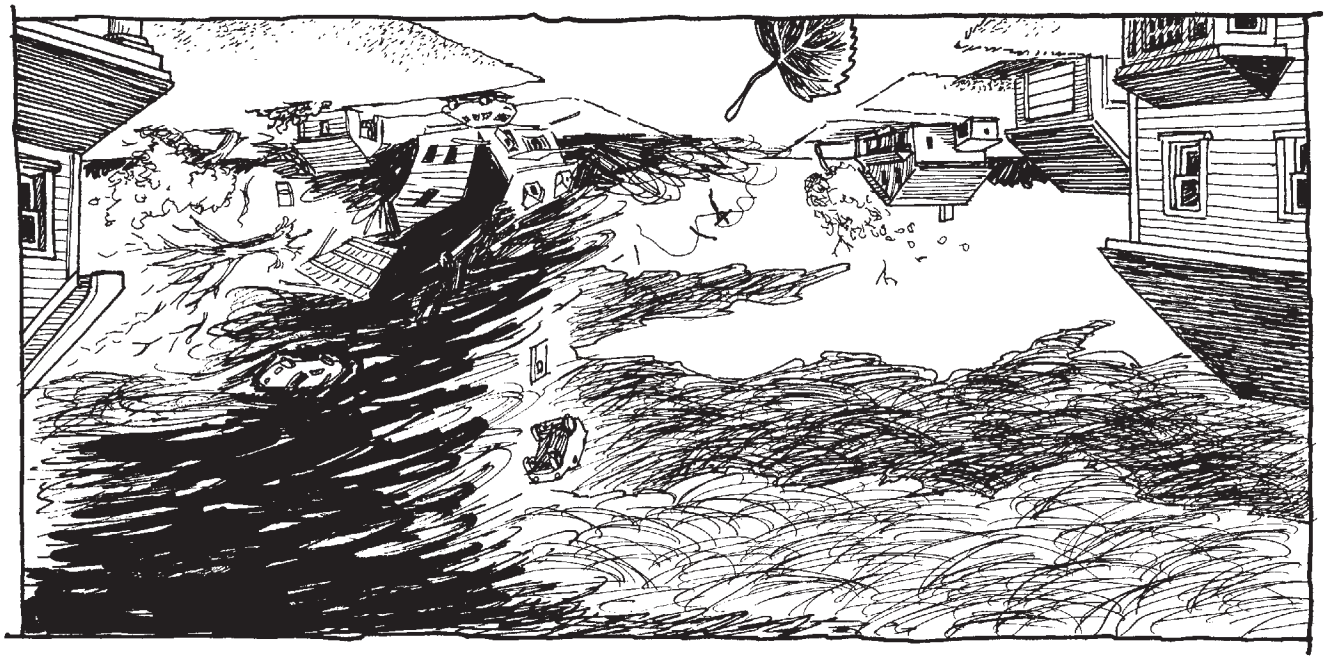
It blows over wheat fields shimmering gold.
It sometimes blows hot and sometimes cold.

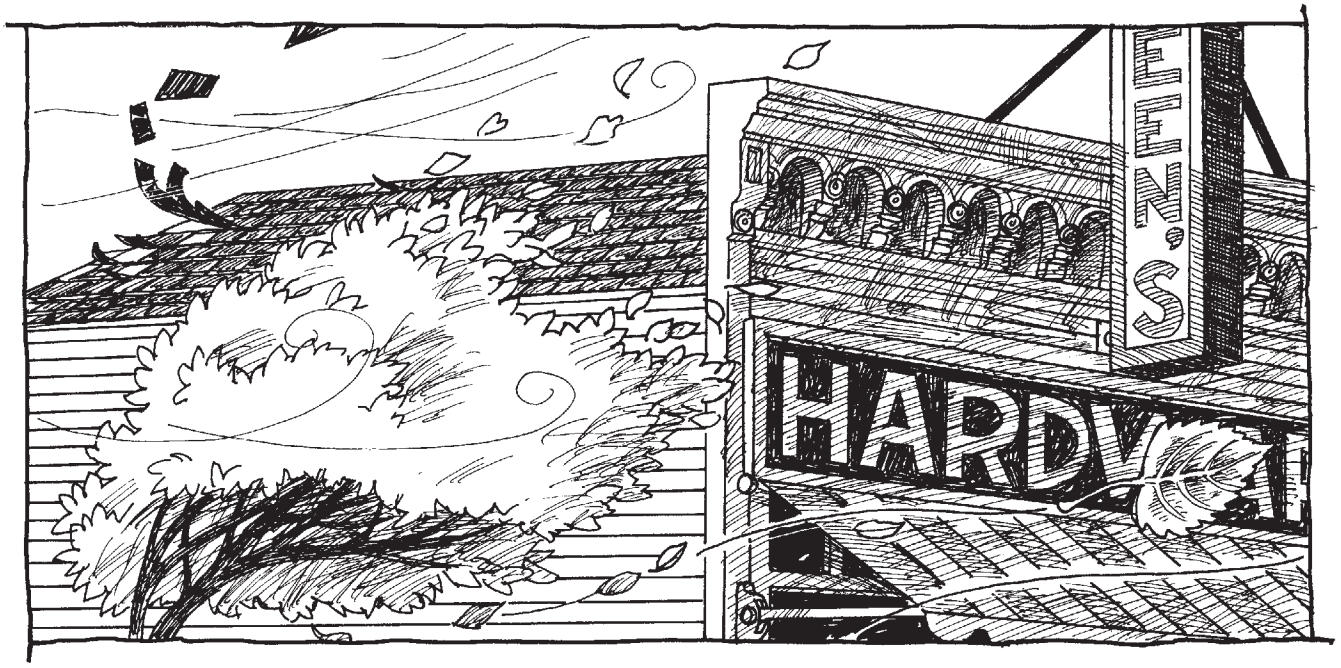
It blows from fields to the sandy shore.
It sweeps off seashells and much more.



Next it blows out over the sea.
It whips up waves as big as trees.

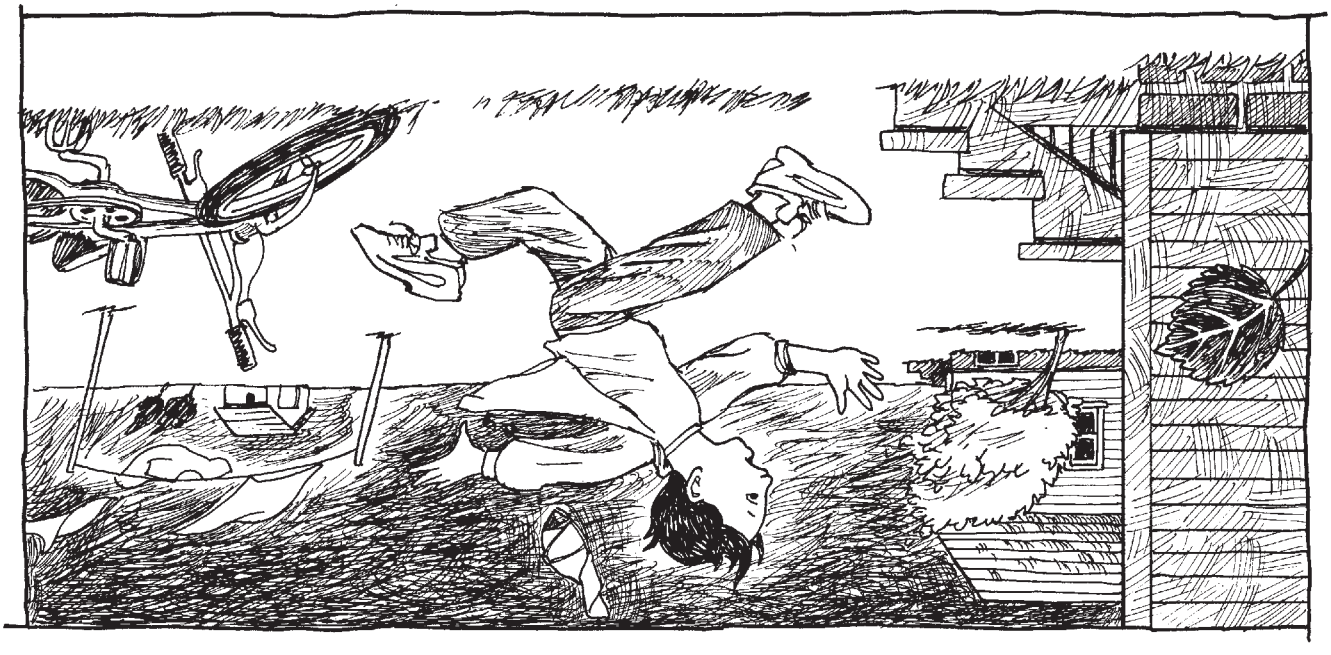
It blows back 'round into the town.
It huffs and puffs to blow a house down.

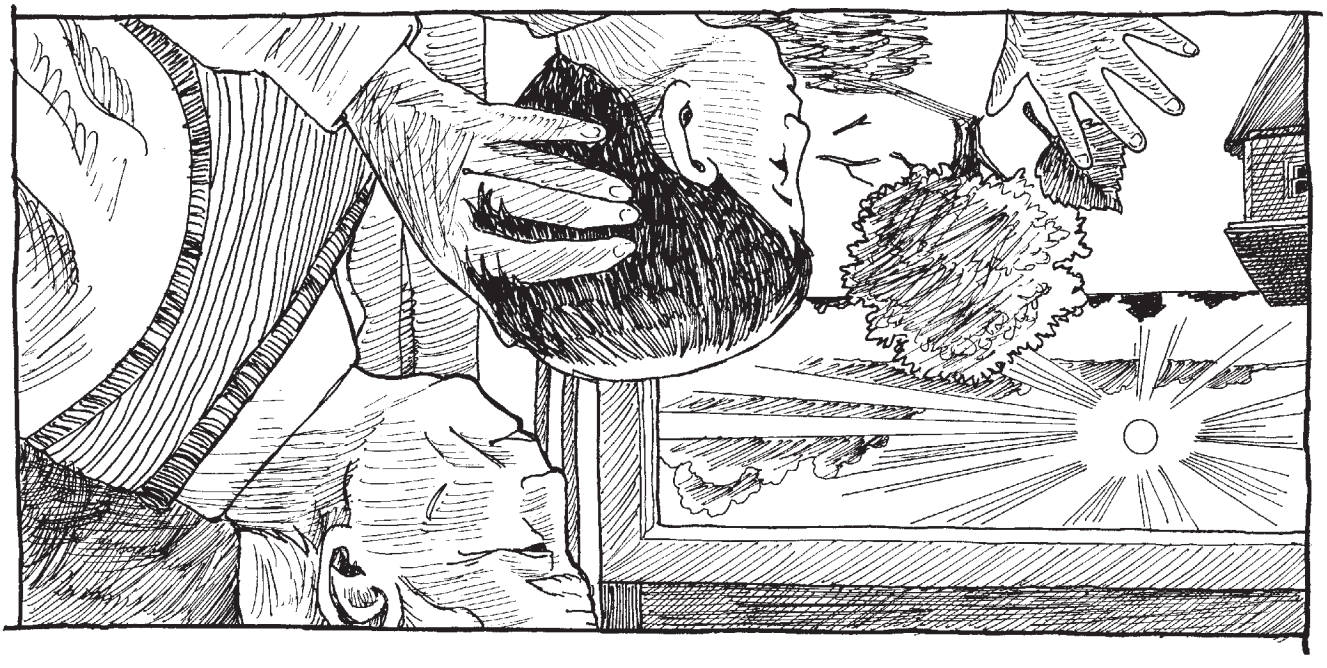




It lifts the shingles off Ms. Green's shop.
It blows so long, it might never stop.

It blows the hat right off my head.
It blows me home and into my bed.



I'm afraid to leave my house to play.
I'm scared the wind might blow me away.


"Don't fret or worry your little head.
It's just the wind," my grandpa said.
